The letters to the Philippians, Colossians, Ephesians, and Philemon are called the "captivity epistles" because they were written while the Apostle Paul was imprisoned. Apart from that, however, they are all very different. Philippians is a friendly letter to a church in which Paul has great confidence. He calls for unity among the believers in Philippi and for continued growth in faith and godly knowledge. In Colossians, Paul counters a serious threat from false teaching by stressing Christ's supremacy. Philemon is a personal letter about a runaway slave. And Ephesians offers general encouragement and exhortation to a number of churches--and to the church at large. While these four letters are different, one theme runs throughout. No matter what our status, situation, or life circumstances, Christ may be served.
