Chinatown Meets Magnum Force

The third Boss MacTavin mystery is a standalone title that takes the rugged Southern Scot on his most dangerous Correction. To pay back a marker to a San Francisco don, Boss accepts an assignment in Charlotte: verify that a death was really accidental. But the assignment proves to be far more than the do-nothing task Boss expected. And he finds himself trapped in dangerous web involving east and west coast mobs, a smoking hot widow with no time for tears, and a gang of crooked cops.

Trivia

--Boss has made San Francisco his new home in this novel.

--The book provides a unique solution to the problem of transporting weapons and gear Boss can't take on a plane. He owns a fleet of Hertzies, customized for his particular needs, and a new character appears as his Car and Gun Dude.

--Boss has to go undercover on a second trip to Charlotte. But he's already been seen in his signature patch and his old acrylic eye screams Fake. Brad Strickland suggested a digital eye--and it made all the difference.

--As Boss reaches his fortieth birthday, the series prepares to chart new ground. Among the gifts, Boss receives a new gun to replace his old school Colt Python.

--The manuscript had been completed in December 2013--when a sudden computer crash shut down my laptop and erased all files. I had no backup copy of Charlotte Kills...except an ancient second draft I'd stored on a flash drive. Working from this, I rewrote the novel, a recovery process that lasted five months.

--Cally Phillips, a brilliant Scottish writer, assisted with Boss's undercover Edinburgh accent.
