Girl, Interrupted (Faber and Faber Screenplays) James Mangold

The film version of the national bestseller by Susanna Kaysen, which The New York Times Book Review called a "compelling and heartbreaking story," Girl, Interrupted was written and directed by James Mangold and stars Winona Ryder as a teenager sent against her will to a psychiatric hospital for two years, only to find a deeply troubled community of souls who somehow manage to help one another heal. Mangold provides an Introduction in which he reflects on his graduation from low-budget independent cinema to a big-budget studio picture, while nevertheless continuing to explore unsettling, often unglamorous human stories with his particular blend of human empathy and an unblinking eye for the details of existence.
