Herbert D. Smith and the Citrus Blackfly David Lewis

Herbert D. Smith was an entomologist with the U.S. Department of Agriculture who spent his career doing pioneering biological control work in the face of an entrenched American bureaucracy that favored chemical control. The last fifteen years of his life was spent leading the biological control effort in Mexico against the citrus blackfly, a pest that threatened to destroy the American citrus industry. Smith trained and worked closely with Mexican agronomists, and the effort expanded across most of Mexico. The project was a spectacular success.
